

Lumen Touch Launches New Competency-Based Professional Development Program Supported by Micro-Credentials in Partnership with BloomBoard

KANSAS CITY, MO, May 10, 2018 – Lumen Touch, an all-in-one enterprise management system for school districts has launched Bright PATH, a new professional development program designed to personalize the learning for each member of a school district. Developed in partnership with BloomBoard, the leading providers of competency-based learning, this new, personalized, professional learning program enables administrators, teachers, and staff to receive district professional development supported by competency-based, micro-credentials to support student achievement and their own individual learning goals.

“At Lumen Touch, we look for partnerships to complement our all-in-one enterprise management system and provide our school districts with the best technology. BloomBoard provides an opportunity for administrators, teachers, and staff at our schools to experience a very interactive, meaningful approach to learning, and access to content from well respected organizations. We are excited to partner with BloomBoard and continue to meet our vision of connecting all learners to opportunity.” –Dr. John Vandewalle, CEO, Lumen Touch

"Educator professional training and advancement via micro-credentialing is gaining momentum across the country. It's great to see high-quality partners like Lumen Touch embracing this approach," said Sanford Kenyon, CEO at BloomBoard. "We look forward to supporting their efforts to enable educators to grow and advance through competency-based professional learning."
